Relevance of the dissertation research topic. In modern conditions on the global scale, the issues of food security becomes the most important task of each state, as the current situation and the newest factors that have arisen before the subjects of state administration sets the tasks of a cardinal decision in the direction of food production. Based on this, the agrarian policy of the region should also be oriented to solving such tasks.

Agrarian policy in the regional context should be based on the effective placement of productive forces in it. The solution of the most important task of the state, which has already been mentioned, depends on it. Besides, agrarian policy of a region should balance interests of the state and other economic agents in the field of economic activity. Methodologically, issues related to the organization of such agrarian policy are still insufficient. This is what determines the relevance of the study we have chosen.
